حافظ، قرن چهاردهم.

[اشعار در باره انجام کار های خوب] / شاعر حافظ. [هندوستان] : [ناشر مشخص نیست]، [بین سالهای 1575 - 1600].

1 صفحه ؛ 30 سانتی متر. عنوان به انگلیسی : Verses on the Permanence of Good Deeds.

“This calligraphic fragment includes verses composed by the celebrated Persian poet Hāfīz (died 1388–89, 791 AH) on the futility of worldly goods. Beginning with a praise of God, huwa al-fard (the Unique), in the upper-left corner, the verses continue: “Oh wealthy one, soothe the heart of the indigent / Because the treasury of gold, riches, and coins will not remain / On this topaz canopy (the sky) they have inscribed in gold / That nothing will remain except the good deeds of the generous ones.” The verses are executed in black nasta’liq script on blue paper and outlined in cloud bands on a lavishly illuminated background. Between the two bayts (verses) of poetry appear illuminated triangles (or thumb pieces), which fill in the interim space created by the intersection of the diagonal lines of text and the rectangular frame...”—library of congress

[اشعار حافظ] / شاعر حافظ. [ایران] : [ناشر مشخص نیست]، [بین سالهای 1800 - 1899]. 1 صفحه ؛ 30 سانتی متر.

عنوان به انگلیسی : Verses by Hāfīz

“This calligraphic fragment includes a ruba’i (iambic pentameter quatrain), composed by the famous Persian poet Hāfīz (died 1388–89, 791 AH). The verses use 'irfani (mystical) terms to urge the exculpation of the beloved's faults: “If from the hand of your musky tress, a fault is passed, passed / And if against us from their dark mole, an act of tyranny is passed, passed / If there is no (mystical) sect for memory's indignation, bring wine / Every foulness that you see (as) purity is passed, passed.” The text is written in black nasta’liq script typical of calligraphic works produced in India during the 19th century...”—library of congress سالهای 1500 - 1699]. 2 صفحه؛ 30 سانتی متر. عنوان به انگلیسی: Khusraw Kills a Lion.

"This painting depicts an episode from the second book of Nizāmī Ganjavī's Khamsah (Quintet) entitled Khusraw va Shirin. In this book, the adventures and battles of the Persian king Khusraw are described, and his love for the Armenian princess Shirin. At a feast one day Khusraw and Shirin were sitting and drinking together (per the folio's verso) when suddenly a lion approached the royal pavilion. Thereupon, the king, albeit drunk, made a fist, hit the lion in the ear, and killed it on the spot. The painting follows the text very closely by depicting Shirin and her attendants still in the pavilion and King Khusraw killing the lion with his bare hands. ..."—library of congress

1 صفحه؛ 30 سانتی متر. عنوان به انگلیسی: Beginning of Sa'di's "Gulistan"

"A didactic work in both prose and verse, the famous Gulistan (The rose garden) was composed in 1258 by the Persian poet and prose writer Shaykh Sa'di Shirazi (circa 1213–92), a contemporary of the famous poet Jalal al-Din Rumi (1207–73). It contains a number of moralizing stories that bear similarities to the fables of the French writer Jean de La Fontaine (1621–95). In Persian lands, Sa'di's maxims were highly valued and manuscripts of his work were widely copied and illustrated. Sa'di notes that he composed Gulistan to teach the rules of conduct in life both to kings and dervishes..."—library of congress

"This fragment includes an excerpt from Bustan (The fruit orchard), by Shaykh Sa'di Shirazi (circa 1213–92), in which he offers nasihat (advice) to a ruler. The author counsels a king not to worry about what he does not have, because all things come to an end. He also notes that good deeds matter, as only a man's reputation and the memory of him remain after his death. Sa'di's text continues on the fragment's verso, as evidenced by the similar subject matter and the continuation of the makun takiyah (catchwords) in the lower-left corner of the recto..."—library of congress

"Khamsah"

"This painting represents an episode drawn from Nizami Ganjavī's Haft Paykar (Seven thrones), the fourth book of his Khamsah (Quintet). The great Sasanian king Bahram Gur (reigned 430–38), famous for his hunting prowess and thus known by his nickname (Bahram Gur means "wild ass"), astonishes his companions with his quasi-divine skill and power in hunting onagers. After his expedition and as a gesture of generosity, he orders 1,200 onagers (half to be branded and half to be earmarked with gold rings) to be distributed among his people. The scene shows the ruler and his entourage on horseback against a pink and green landscape as they shoot wild animals with arrows. Behind a hillock appear four other men either looking at the scene below or observing the birds flying in the gold-painted sky. Above and below the painting are illuminated panels of the story's text, which continues on the fragment's verso...”—library of congress

"This fragment is the third folio of the Farhang-i Jahāngīrī, a Persian lexicon purportedly executed in Agra in 1028 AH (1618–19). A total of four folios of this work are held in the collections of the Library of Congress. The author of this Persian-language farhang (dictionary) was Jamal al-Din Husayn b. Fakhr al-Din Hasan Inju Shirazi (died 1626), a learned man from an old Persian sayyid (noble) family who came from Persia to Akbar's court in India, where he held high offices. He began writing his dictionary in 1596–97 at Akbar's request, basing it on Persian poems and previous lexicographical works. “This calligraphic fragment belongs to a series of 22 insha' (literary compositions or letters) written by calligraphers named Mir Kalan, Khan Zaman (son of Khan Khanan), Qa'im Khan, Lutfallah Khan, and Mahabat Khan. Judging from the script (Indian nasta'liq), a seal impression bearing the date 1113 AH (1701–2), and a letter mentioning the city of Janpur in India, it appears that these writings were executed in India during the 18th century. Furthermore, if one were to identify the calligrapher Mir Kalan as the renowned painter active during the mid-18th century in Lucknow, then this identification would add further support to identifying this calligraphic series in the Library of Congress' collection as a corpus of materials produced by several writers active in 18th-century India. The calligraphies are typically written in a hasty nasta'liq on white paper, framed in blue, and pasted to a pink or salmon cardboard...”—library of congress

عنوان به انگلیسی : Noruz (New Year's) Poem

“This calligraphic panel includes a ruba'i (iambic pentameter quatrain) signed by the calligrapher Agha'i. He has signed his work: "written by the poor Agha'i." Unfortunately, nothing is known about this calligrapher, and the approximate date of the piece (17th–18th centuries) must remain conjectural. The quatrain is written in black nasta'liq script on a piece of paper framed in blue and pasted to a brown paper strengthened with cardboard. The poem reads as follows: “For you, Pride of Government and Religion / May happiness be your aide and may fortune be beside you. / Congratulations to you on the festival of New Year's / May you always sit side by side [with happiness and fortune].” This poem wishes a ruler everlasting happiness and good fortune on the occasion of New Year's. This Noruz (New Year) is most likely the spring equinox (March 21) marking the beginning of the solar calendar as celebrated in Iran and parts of India. It appears that this calligraphic panel was executed on such an occasion to celebrate the New Year and to wish a patron prosperity for the years to come... ”—library of congress

“This calligraphic panel executed in nasta'liq script on a beige paper sprinkled with gold flecks is provided with a (water-damaged) frame and is pasted to a brown piece of paper strengthened with cardboard. Between the two lines of calligraphy, which offer a prayer to a ruler on the occasion of 'id (also seen as 'Id and Eid), appears another small fragment cut out and pasted in the center right. It reads: "In the name of Muhammad and Muhammad's family [prayers upon them].” The two main lines of calligraphy read: “On this 'id, may God the Exalted bring to the high essence of his Majesty, / Navab Sahib, everlasting blessing and good fortune.” This poem wishes a ruler, described as a dhat 'ali (high essence), everlasting happiness and good fortune on the occasion of 'id. This festival may be Noruz (New Year), that is, the Spring equinox (March 21) marking the beginning of the solar calendar as celebrated in Iran and parts of India... ”—library of congress

“This calligraphic fragment contains three ghazals (lyrical poems) by 'Abd al-Baqi, known as Tabib Isfahani. He was a tabib (court physician) to the Persian ruler Nadir Shah (ruled 1736–47) and a prolific writer whose many verses form part of his divan (compendium of poems). His takhallus (signature) "Tabib" appears in the verses. The first ghazal rhymes with payda (found), the second ghazal rhymes with ra (the accusative marker), and the third ghazal rhymes with aftada ast (happened, occurred). All three ghazals describe the faithfulness of a lover and the sadness felt upon separation from the beloved. The lover describes his pain while simultaneously advising himself not to complain and to be patient in the face of adversity... ”—library of congress

The blue border decorated with flecks of gold serves as a visual echo to the poem's contents. Verses by Shaykh Baha'i

“This calligraphic fragment includes verses composed by Shaykh Baha'i, a Persian mystical poet of the 11th century. The poem describes the many ways in which to express one's love of God: “Oh, the arrow of Your grief (is) the target of Your lovers' heart(s) / People are mesmerized by You, but You are absent from both time and place / Sometimes I retire to my monastery, others I inhabit a mosque / That means that I search for You from house to house / Everyone speaks about his love for You in (his own) language / The lover by the song of sorrow and the minstrel by (his) melody.” The verses are executed in black nasta'liq script written diagonally on a cream-colored paper decorated with delicate flower and leaf motifs painted in gold...”—library of congress
